“ I knew Sammie for about eight years while my wife was her caregiver. Sammie had what I like to think of as Sammie's Superpowers. Wherever we went with Sammie I was afraid at first that people would give her strange looks or say something rude. Instead, everywhere we went someone would call her name and ask how she was doing. Her face would light up with the biggest smile when she said "Doing Good: And the people calling out to her would have the same big smile. Sammie's first Superpower was restoring your faith in people in a world so full of cruelty. Sammie's second Superpower was reminding us that yes, we might have a headache today, or a backache tomorrow, but there was still many blessings to smile about. After all, Sammie was dealing with so much more than us and she was smiling. Rhonda and Billie are also a blessing as the wonderful parents and great friends that they are.
